10. If the job is delayed beyond the given schedule, NABARD shall be at its discretion to execute job through any other suitable agency at the risk and cost of the original agency.

11. Situations where NDT is an option to consider for investigation of in situ concrete

   - to investigate the homogeneity of concrete mixing lack of grout in post tensioning ducts
   - to determine the density and strength of concrete in a structure
   - to determine the location of reinforcing bars and the cover over the bars to determine the number and size/diameter of reinforcing bars
   - to determine the extent of defects such as corrosion
   - to determine the location of in-built wiring, piping, ducting, etc.
   - to determine whether internal defects such as voids, cracks, delaminations, honeycombing, lack of bonding with reinforcing bars, etc. exist in concrete
   - to determine if there is a bond between epoxy bonded steel plates and concrete members.

12. Test to be undertaken:

   a. Rebound Hammer Test

      Rebound Hammer test is conducted to assess the relative strength and elasticity of concrete onsite based on the hardness at or near its exposed surface. Depending on the age of the concrete structure and carbonation effect some specialized investigation is suggested before conducting the test. It consists essentially of a metal plunger, one end of which is held against the concrete surface while the free end is struck by a spring-loaded mass which rebounds to a point on a graduated scale. The point is indicated by an index rider. The amount of rebound increases with increase in concrete strength for a particular concrete mix. It measures the surface hardness of concrete and provides an estimation of surface compressive strength, uniformity and quality of concrete. User expertise is low and can be readily operated by field personnel. It gives accurate assessment of the strength of the surface layer of material. The entire structure can be tested in its ‘as-built’ condition. It can be very costly and time consuming as instrumentation is required to measure response. It requires careful planning and can damage structure. The member must be isolated from the rest of the structure prior to the test.

b. Ultrasonic Pulse Velocity (UPV) Test

Ultrasonic Pulse Velocity Test is conducted as per IS 13111 – 1992 to assess the quality of concrete which is suspected to have low compaction, voids (porosity), delamination or damaged material in concrete under test. Ultrasonic Pulse Velocity Test can also be used for the following applications:

- Estimation of Strength of Concrete
- Establishing Homogeneity of Concrete
- Studies on Durability of Concrete
- Analysis of Surface Crack Depth
- Determination of Dynamic Modulus of Elasticity

Voltage pulses are generated and transformed into wave bursts of mechanical energy by the transmitting transducer (which must be coupled to the specimen surface through a suitable medium). A receiving transducer is coupled to the specimen at a known distance to measure the interval between the transmission and reception of a pulse. There are three practical arrangements for measuring pulse velocity, namely direct, diagonal and surface techniques. The direct approach provides the greatest sensitivity and is therefore superior to the other arrangements. Determination of the variability and quality of concrete by measuring pulse velocity. Using transmission method, the extent of such defects such as voids, honeycombing, cracks and segregation may be determined. This technique is also useful when examining fire damaged concrete. Low level is required to make measurements. However, expertise is needed to interpret the results and determining the quality and uniformity of concrete. It can rapidly survey large areas and thick members. Path lengths of 10m to 15m can be inspected with suitable equipment. Proper surface preparation is required. The work is very time consuming as it takes only point measurements. Skill is required in the analysis of results as moisture variations and presence of metal reinforcement can affect results. The interpretation of ultrasonic test results based on published graphs and tables can be misleading. It is therefore necessary that correlation with the concrete be inspected is carried out. It works on single homogenous material.

c. Electrochemical Half-cell Potentiometer Test

Electrochemical Half-cell Potentiometer test provides a relatively quick method of assessing reinforcement corrosion over a wide area without the need of wholesale removal of the concrete cover. The method of half-cell potential measurements normally involves measuring the potential of an embedded reinforcing bar relative to a reference half-cell placed on the concrete surface. The half-cell is usually a copper/copper sulphate or silver/silver chloride cell but other combinations are used. The concrete functions as an electrolyte and the risk of corrosion of the reinforcement in the immediate region of the test location may be related empirically to the measured potential difference. In some circumstances, useful measurements can be obtained between two half-cells on the concrete surface. ASTM C876 - 91 gives a Standard Test Method for Half-Cell Potentials of Uncoated Reinforcing Steel in Concrete. Quantitative measurements are made so that a structure can be monitored over a period of time and deterioration can be noted. Areas of usage include marine structures, bridge decks, abutments and so on. Used in conjunction with other tests, it has been found helpful when investigating concrete contaminated by salts.

d. Carbonation Test

The method of testing consists of determining the depth of the carbonated layer on the surface of hardened concrete by means of an indicator. Carbonation of concrete occurs when the carbon dioxide, in the atmosphere in the presence of moisture, reacts with hydrated cement minerals to produce carbonates, e.g. calcium carbonate. The carbonation process is also called depassivation. Carbonation penetrates below the exposed surface of concrete extremely slowly. The significance of carbonation is that the usual protection of the reinforcing steel generally present in the concrete due to the alkaline conditions caused by the hydrated cement paste is neutralized by carbonation. Thus, if the entire concrete covering the reinforcing steel is carbonated, corrosion of the steel would occur if moisture and oxygen could reach the steel. The time required for carbonation can be estimated knowing the concrete grade and using the equation.

e. Concrete Core Extraction and Testing

In most structural investigations, diagnoses extraction of core samples is unavoidable and often essential. Cores are usually extracted by drilling using a diamond tipped core cutter cooled with water. Broken samples, for example, due to popping, spalling and delamination, are also commonly retrieved for further analysis as these samples may provide additional evidence as to the cause of distress. The selection of the locations for extraction of core samples is made after non-destructive testing which can give guidance on the most suitable sampling areas.

For instance, a cover meter can be used to ensure there are no reinforcing bars where the core is to be taken; or the ultrasonic pulse velocity test can be used to establish the areas of maximum and minimum pulse velocity that could indicate the highest and lowest compressive strength areas in the structure.

Moreover, using non-destructive tests, the number of cores that need to be taken can be reduced or minimized. This is often an advantage since coring is frequently viewed as being destructive. Also the cost of extracting cores is quite high and the damage to the concrete is severe.
The extracted cores can be subjected to a series of tests and serve multiple functions such as:

- confirming the findings of the non-destructive test
- identifying the presence of deleterious matter in the concrete
- ascertaining the strength of the concrete predicting the potential durability of the concrete
- confirming the mix composition of the concrete for dispute resolution
- Determining specific properties of the concrete not attainable by non-destructive methods such as intrinsic permeability.

This test is used to determine the compressive strength of a concrete core, which has usually been extracted from an existing structure. The value of compressive strength can then be used in conjunction with other measured properties to assess the condition of the concrete.

Using a masonry saw, the core is first trimmed to the correct test length, which varies upon the standard being adopted. Following trimming, the core will have its ends either ground perfectly flat, or be capped in a material to produce a smooth bearing surface. After the prescribed curing has taken place, the specimen is then crushed to failure noting the maximum load achieved. From the values of load and dimensions, the compressive strength of the core can be calculated.

f. Chemical Test for Chloride (Cl) and pH value

The test for chloride content in concrete is very significant as when chloride is present in reinforced concrete it can cause very severe corrosion of the steel reinforcement. The test involves crushing a sample of the concrete to a fine dust, extracting the chloride with hot dilute nitric acid and then adding silver nitrate solution to precipitate any chloride present.

pH is an important parameter to indicate the alkalinity level of concrete. The most severe concrete damages are caused or accompanied by dropping of the alkalinity level and consequently, decrease of the pH value of concrete. Therefore, it is crucial to measure the pH of concrete by an accurate and reliable method. Surface to be cleaned with wire brush and concrete sample in powder form is collected and mixed with distilled water thoroughly. After 60 Seconds of retention time, insert a pH strip into the mixture. Compare the strip to the color chart to determine the pH.
